"My life is so 1 _____! I can't go anywhere but in the castle!" Malison screamed on her bed.

"Princess Malison, I fully understand how 2 _____ you are, but please stay safe and don't 3 _____ a story to us again and sneak out on your own... How about some sweets for the tea?" Saidi, Malison's servant at the bedside comforted her.

"Sigh...Thank you, Saidi. I won't do that again, I just want to 4 _____ from this castle, to do something 5 _____. It feels like I've learnt so many things, but for nothing."

"Your time will come, my dear princess Mali. Your knowledge and your skills will 6 _____ the shield and the sword for those in need. Now, I'll go to get you those lovely sweets." Saidi smiled and left the room.

Malison lied on the bed imagining a brave adventure. Suddenly, her dream was stopped, and she heard some strange noise from a drawer. "Where...it? It...somewhere!" The 7 _____ voice was followed by a series of turning and throwing sounds.

Malison got curious and wanted to 8 _____ what was the noise about. She carefully opened the drawer and found a mess. All the things inside were clearly moved by someone, or, something. Malison kept quiet as she saw a wisp of light busily flying around her belongings. It seemed that the little creature was trying to 9 _____ something important.

Malison felt so 10 _____ to find this little creature. She did not make a single sound, and observed. It took quite a while for it to finally realize being caught.

"Oh no! I'm.....You're.....It's.....!" the little creature fell on a book, lost its words and sounded really 11 _____.

"Take a breath, I won't hurt you, well, for now. So, who're you and what're you doing here?" Malison asked curiously.
